

There's Still Time to Unveil the Treasure in Your Attic

Duncaster to stage its own version of "Antiques Roadshow" on July 30

BLOOMFIELD, CT., July 13, 2009 – Time is running out to dig out those treasures and book a slot to find out what they are really worth. On Thursday, July 30 Duncaster Retirement Community will host its very own "Antique Showcase". From 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. on the community's Bloomfield campus, professional antique appraisers from Central Antiques, will look over those treasures and tell participants about their worth. Duncaster is located at 40 Loeffler Road, Bloomfield.

Jamie Selig, owner of Central Antiques in Windsor has been appraising antiques for over 12 years.

"For the fans of PBS' Antiques Roadshow this event will look very familiar," says Duncaster Director of Marketing Patty Roohr. "We'll all learn a little bit more about the treasures passed down from our families and we'll be able to do it right here in Bloomfield."

The event is free and open to anyone in the community but please be sure to call and reserve a seat. Those wishing to uncover the unsung treasure in their attics should pre-register by contacting Fran at Duncaster at fkent@duncaster.org or (860) 380-5006 by July 28. Valet parking, refreshment and assistance will be available.
